

ABSTRACT

A transceiver security system which provides security to a transceiver user by transmitting information, including an encoded period of time and a request for help, to a computer server. After the period of time expires, an alert call is made from the computer server to the transceiver user. Depending on the response from the transceiver user, the computer server may contact an emergency service provider.